RCI, Inc.

This two-day course, presented by the Gulf Coast Chapter of RCI, is aimed at those consultants, engineers, architects, building owners, roofing material manufacturers, and others in the industry who provide - or would like to learn more about - roof observer functions. The course provides an understanding of the proper role of the observer, including authority, daily reports, and ethics. Also discussed are contract documents. About half of the class time is spent identifying items that the individual should document while observing the installation of a variety of roof systems, including low- and steep-slope roofs.

Highlights of the program include:

- Role of the Roof Observer
- Construction Contract Documents
- Report Process
- Low-Slope Roofing
- Steep-Slope Roofing
- Ethics

The Rooftop Quality Assurance course features fundamental concepts that frequently prove useful for individuals who plan to enroll in other RCI Educational Programs. This course also serves well as a stand-alone course as it provides a broad technical background for interested personnel. The course is also deemed a preparatory program for those individuals desiring to take the RRO exam. The exam for the RCI Registered Roof Observer will be offered at the venue on September 17, 2011.
